Where Will the McLean County Health Department Pop-Up!

Health department to do weekly pop-up events aimed at catching people making healthy choices

BLOOMINGTON, IL- Starting this week, the McLean County Health Department is hitting the streets to identify and reward residents they find practicing good public health practices as part of their daily routine. The weekly pop-up events will take place at locations throughout the county and will not be publically announced until tweeted by the health department anywhere from hours to minutes before the event.

Building on momentum from National Public Health Week in April, the health department seeks to reinforce the message that part of creating the healthiest nation starts with each of our individual actions and choices. When people make good food choices, make time to exercise, and get regular health checkups, they make healthy choices that not only improve their personal health, but also sets an example for family and friends. The pop-up events are a way to recognize those people who are making healthy choices.

At each pop-up event, members from the health department will be presenting unsuspecting individuals with an I Am Public Health t-shirt, summer health tips, and information about the wide range of services available at the health department. The weekly pop-up program will run through the week of August 17th.
